

Team up with us to help create Edmonton's 'Missing Middle' Infill Design Competition Criteria

You're invited to a workshop to help develop the criteria that will be used to judge the 2019 Edmonton 'Missing Middle' Infill Design Competition submissions. The workshop will also be an opportunity to share your thoughts on any local neighbourhood context that should be taken into consideration, and sign up to be considered for one of the competition's community advisor positions.

CREATE

The competition will solicit designs from multidisciplinary teams of architects and builders/developers for medium-density 'missing middle' housing on a site of 5 lots currently owned by the City at the northeast corner of 112 Avenue and 106 Street in the Spruce Avenue neighbourhood. The winning team will be given the opportunity to purchase the site and build their design, which will be used as a prototype to inspire innovative 'missing middle' infill development in other parts of the city.

What is 'Missing Middle' Housing?

The term "missing middle" refers to multi-unit housing that falls between single detached homes and tall apartment buildings. It includes row housing, triplexes/fourplexes, courtyard housing, and walk-up apartments. These housing forms are considered "missing" because there has been a decline in their development in recent decades in many cities, and they were never widely developed in Edmonton. Encouraging this type of housing is essential for welcoming new people and homes into older neighbourhoods, and creating complete communities with a variety housing options for people at every stage of life and income level.

About the Competition

Launched in 2016, Edmonton's Infill Design Competition provides an opportunity to encourage productive conversations about infill and help the public and development community understand what's possible for infill design. The 2016 competition sought ideas for low-density infill on a hypothetical site, showing how infill could augment, rather than detract, from the character of our mature and established neighbourhoods. With the development of City Plan – the City's new Municipal Development Plan and Transportation Master Plan – currently underway, the 2019 competition is an opportunity to highlight the connection between innovative new housing forms and the urban shift that will be integral to the future of Edmonton. The competition will be focused on demonstrating how medium-density 'missing middle' housing can be both economically-feasible and include good design that works in Edmonton.
